

Among the strange treasures of popular art in Sweden are the paintings made a hundred years ago by peasant craftsmen in the central province of Dalarna. The naive art of these painters in the heart of Sweden flourished in geographical isolation. Today they inspire new generations of artists with their direct approach and simple lines.

Dear Ben:

Thank you very much for your letter dated December 28, 1964, containing two reports of reception.

After checking your reports I am pleased to inform you that you heard the First Programme of the Home Service of Sveriges Radio during its all-night service. Enclosed please find verification cards covering your reception.

You may be interested to learn that reception of Swedish stations seems to have been quite good that particular morning, and the morning before, as reports have been received from quite a few North American DXers, Roy H. Millar of Marysville, Washington, being one of them.

In reply to your question I am glad to say I know Peter Bengtson very well, although I have not heard from him since he returned from the U.S.A. He lives far up in the northern part of Sweden.

Please do not hesitate to write again if you would like any additional information of any kind, or if you happen to hear Swedish stations once again.

In the meantime I wish you continued good reception during the new year.

Lars A. Rydén
